UM STUDENT NAMED ONE OF GOOD HOUSEKEEPING MAGAZINE'S
"100 WOMEN OF PROMISE, CLASS OF '87"

MISSOULA --

University of Montana student Ann Lane has been named one of Good Housekeeping magazine's "100 Women of Promise, Class of '87."

Lane, a 22-year-old senior English-honors major, is the daughter of Thomas and Mary Lane of Livingston.

She and other outstanding young women from across the country will be featured in Good Housekeeping's July 1987 issue, which salutes the bicentennial anniversary of the U.S. Constitution.

A photo of Lane will appear in the magazine, which should be on newsstands by mid-June. She'll also receive a "declaration of promise" signed by Good Housekeeping's editor-in-chief and publisher; the president of the Washington Center, the nation's largest independent student internship program; and UM President James Koch.

UM was one of 3,200 colleges and universities asked to nominate a student for the honor. Candidates had to have a grade-point average of at least 3.0 as well as show "notable campus and community activity" and a broad range of "outstanding personal endeavor."

The final selection was made by a panel of nationally known educators.

Lane, who minors in philosophy and has a 3.59 grade-point average, is a member of Advocates and the Mortar Board, Alpha Lambda Delta and Phi Eta Sigma honor societies. She also attended the University of Massachusetts in 1984-85 as part of the National Student Exchange and is active in Christ the King Church and Big Brothers and Sisters of Missoula.

After graduating from UM in June, she plans to attend law school and pursue a career in child advocacy law.
